War Or Peace in the South China Sea?
- Timo Kivimäki: 2002

Not only is the South China Sea of strategic importance; it is also rich in oil and other natural resources. As such, it is the subject of overlapping territorial disputes between several East and Southeast Asian countries as well as the scope of military tensions and potentially dangerous conflicts. But disputes over the South China Sea are much more complex than simply issues of military security. Environmental values, economic security and political developments are also involved. Spanning the full

Security, Arms Control and Defence Restructuring in East Asia - Bjørn Müller: 2013-01-22

First published in 1998, this volume examines East Asia, especially Northeast Asia, which has been a region of considerable political security importance for several key reasons. It features several great and medium powers: China, Japan and Russia, as well as North and South Korea. Even though no arms race is yet discernible among these powers, if it did, the level of militarization could be alarming, if only because of the tremendous and rapidly growing economic potential of the regional states. Even though relations among regional states (except the two Koreas) are currently peaceful, the region features several unresolved issues (e.g. concerning territory) and a historical legacy of enmity between several states. To prevent such conflicts from developing into armed conflict of the utmost importance. As the regional powers are still predominantly defensively oriented, i.e. most states lack the requisite power projection or inversion capabilities to inflict serious harm on each other. However, this might change as the regional states become more of confidence-building measures; an institutionalization of regional relations; and of a strengthening of commitments to defensive military strategies and postures.

War and the Engineers - Kai A. Lieber - 2018-09-05

Do some technologies provoke war? Do others promote peace? Offense-defense theory contends that technological change is an important cause of conflict: leaders will be tempted to launch wars when they believe innovation favors attackers over defenders. Offense-defense theory is perhaps best known from the passionate and deeply held debates over nuclear weapons, but it has deeper historical roots, remains a staple in international relations theorizing, and drives modern arms control policymaking. In War and the Engineers, the first book systematically to test the logical and empirical validity of offense-defense theory, Kai A. Lieber examines the relationships among politics, technology, and the causes of war. Lieber’s cases explore the military and political implications of new technologies, the introduction of battle tanks, and the nuclear revolution. Lieber incorporates the new historiography of World War I, which draws on archival materials that only recently became available, to challenge many common beliefs about the conflict. The author’s central conclusion is that technology is neither a cause of international conflict nor a panacea; instead, power politics remains paramount.

The term “Geona” is an Italian and Hebrew name, meaning wisdom, exaltation, pride or majesty. We use our own database of spidered web sites and the Open Directory database, the same database which powers the core directory services for the Web's largest and most popular search engines and portals. Geona is spidering all domains listed in the non-adult part of the Open Directory and millions of additional sites of general interest to maintain a fullest index of highly relevant web sites. http://www.linuxdig.com/documents/dictionary.php LINUXDIG.COM, "Yours News and Resource Site", LinuxDig.com was started in May 2001 as a hobby site with the original intention of getting the RFC's online and becoming an Open Source software link/download site.
