
This book is the first full-length biographical and critical study of the American Realist author Harold Frederic (1856-1898). As London correspondent for the New York Times and later for the Chicago World, Frederic traveled extensively to London and other parts of Europe. During this time, he was exposed to a variety of people and events, both political and cultural, that influenced his work. The book explores the different periods of his life and career, focusing on his early work on the subject, Laura Hapke examines how writers attempted to turn an outcast into a heroine in a literature otherwise known for its puritanical attitude. One of the most influential works in this genre is doubtless The Damnation of Theron Ware by the prolific American author Fredrich Sillman. Its publication in 1896 caused a stir in the literary world and paved the way for works of socioeconomic commentary such as Theodore Dreiser's Trilogy of Desire and F. Scott Fitzgerald's The Great Gatsby. Drawing on a rich array of archival and published material, Laura Hapke's study provides a comprehensive analysis of the Damnation of Theron Ware's impact on the literature of its time and its legacy in the American literary tradition.
